SUPREME COURT'S WRITTEN DECISION

Formal Opinion Handed Down In Election Contest

The Supreme Court this morning handed down the written decision in the Cornwell-Kaine election contest case, an oral decision in which was rendered last Tuesday. The opinion was written by Chief Justice Frear. The syllabus says:

The following ballots, all cast in the same precinct, are held invalid: four ballots, each having a small circle at or near the end of the lower right leg of the cross opposite the first name on the ballot; five ballots, each having all the crosses well formed except one, which was not a cross such as is required by the statute, but was so made in itself and added to by other marks as to indicate an intention to render the ballot distinguishable.

The judgment of the Court is that the respondent, S. E. Kaine, was elected Supervisor of the County of Maui for the district of Wailuku at the election held November 6, 1906, for the term beginning at 12 o'clock noon on the first day of January, 1907.

In connection with this case an amusing incident has cropped up since the decision was rendered. A Lewis, attorney for Kaine, filed a motion that a bill of costs, amounting to $86, be assessed against the loser, W. H. Cornwell. E. M. Watson, attorney for Cornwell, couldn't see it that way. He objected that the witnesses brought down to testify in the case were brought down by Kaine. He had used Kaine's witness to prove his own case, but he didn't subpoena them, he didn't see why his client should pay for them.

"Who put up the money?" asked the Judge of Lewis.

"The firm of Smith & Lewis," replied the attorney.

"Then, I don't see that your client stands to lose anything if the cases are assessed against him," said the Judge.

And Watson arose and thanked the attorney for the opposition cordially for the use of his witnesses and the aid he had given.

The Court decided in favor of Kaine to the extent of $68.80.

SENTENCED TO ONE DAY IN OAHU JAIL

Judge Dole Easy On Woman Convicted Of Bigamy

Ume Sato, the Japanese woman convicted in Judge Dole's United States Court yesterday of bigamy, was sentenced today to one day in Oahu prison and to pay a fine of $200.

The jury found the woman technically guilty of bigamy, but the evidence was of such a character that the judge showed a desire to let her off as easily as possible. It is probable that instead of paying the $200 fine, the woman will serve thirty days in prison in addition to the one day sentence imposed by the judge, and then take the Poor Man's Oath.

According to the story told by the woman on the witness stand, Sato is her family name, and she was never married to Ume Sato. She came from Japan with him some years ago, and in order to get passports, they booked as husband and wife. After arriving in Hawaii, the man told her that she was legally his wife, and frightened her into living with him as such. Later she discovered the truth of the matter and left him. She stated that she was legally married to H. Masuda, and the one child is his.

What will be done further in the matter is a problem. If the law holds that the woman is legally the wife of Sato, divorce proceedings will probably be filed, and when the separation is granted, the woman will marry again the man she now claims is her husband.

JUNIUS KAAE DEAD

Junius Kaae died at the Queen's Hospital yesterday of blood-poisoning. His funeral will take place this afternoon from the Catholic Cathedral at 3:30 o'clock.

Deceased was very prominent in politics during the reign of the late King Kalakaua and held many offices under that monarch.

He was born at Kaneha, Lahaina, Maui, September 17, 1845, and was the son of John Koohehano and Kaakau Kahemalani (w). He received his education in the Hawaiian and foreign schools at Lahaina, and became an expert sugar boiler for the late James Campbell, father of Princess Kawana naka.

Junius Kaae came into later prominence in 1902 by filing a suit to recover the estate of Kelihonui, who was a descendant of one of the island kings, the amount involved being about $50,000,000, as the land comprising the estate in contest was alleged to be the greater part of Honolulu, all that section between the Nuuanu stream and Piliol street, and from Punchbowl to the sea.

CAPTAIN SAUNDERS LOSES HIS LICENSE

Captain J. M. Saunders, of the Pacific Mail steamer Manchuria has had his license as a mariner taken away from him. This action was taken by O. P. Holmes and John K. Bulger, United States Inspectors of Hulls and Boilers, in consequence of the stranding of the Manchuria at the northeast end of Oahu Island on August 20th, while on the way from Japan to this port. The Inspectors in the decision pronounced Saunders negligent and un-skillful in navigating his vessel, and have ordered his license to be suspended for five months, which is the period it has yet to run.

During the investigation, Captain Saunders took all the blame for the accident, and seemed to think that no punishment would be given him. His excuse was that he mistook Makapuu point, near which he grounded, for Mokapu point, the two looking very much alike. When the error was discovered, the order was given to bring the ship to a stop. She was then running at full speed, about 14.7 knots an hour, although the weather was thick and squally. The time was about 4 o'clock in the morning. The Manchuria was got off, with assistance, was repaired at Honolulu and came under her own steam to this city, where she is being repaired. There was no loss of life. In rendering their decision the Inspectors said:

"After a careful consideration of the evidence in this case, we are satisfied that Captain J. M. Saunders was negligent and skillful in navigating the steamship Manchuria on the above occasion, in running the vessel at full speed when in such proximity to the land during a heavy mist and rain squall, which was passing across the bow, obscuring his vision in that direction; which is also in violation of article 16 of the International Rules of the Road."—San Francisco Chronicle.
